One of Forty-Eight Unpublished Letters and Literary Fragments of Robert Louis Stevenson.

London, July 18.—A map Louis Stevenson Stevenson's stepson, has brought to London for sale.

The map was drawn by Stevenson during Osbourne's school days. It was the original having been lost on its way to the publishers. Of the first, Stevenson wyote: "The shape of it took my fancy beyond expression; it contained harbors that pleased me like sonnets, and with the unconsciousness of formance Treasure Island." Of the one now on eale, the author said: "But somehow it was never the same Treasure Island." Of the one now on eale, the author said: "But somehow it was never the same Treasure Island to me."

An interesting letter in the collection is Stevenson's reply to an autorian certain indications of your character, on which I take pleasure in dwelling. They show you so lilitering: they show you so lilitering in they show you so lilitering it help show you so lilitering it help show you so lilitering careless how much offense I may convey to you; and they are so ill-penned that I am impred to hope you will discover a effectivity in percentage of the shall occur to you to trouble an author as you have troubled me, find out—I do not say what he has written—far less would suggest that you should read it—but find out how he is full that the pleasure of the shall occur to you to trouble an author as you have troubled me, find out—I do not say what he has written—far less would suggest that you should read it—but find out how he is full that the pleasure of the shall occur to you to trouble an author as you have troubled me, find out—I do not say what he has written—far less would suggest that you should read it—but find out how he is full that the pleasure of the shall occur to you to trouble and author as you have troubled me, find out to who is full that the pleasure of the shall occur to you. ### WILL ERECT MEMORIAL ON GRAVE OF BONHAM

Tokyo, June 18.—Professor Shige-taka Shigo, the eminent geographer, traveler and author, who will go to the United States this fall to address the American Historical Society at Washington, D. C., will fulfil during his visit a long cherished desire to eract a memorial at San Antonio, Texas, on the grave of the famous Bonham, whose defense of the Alamo, with his heroic band of Texans, is one of the landmarks of American history.

Dr. Shigo's admiration of Bonham is an old story. In his youth the professor had two enthusiasms, one for the romantic record of ancient Japan, and the other for the story of the United States, as told by Quackenbos to successive generations of schoolloys. The famous defense of the Texans fired his imagination, and when he discovered in Japanese history an almost exact parallel in the battle of Narashino, during the Tokugawa Shogunate, the ambition grew that some day he might find a way of commemorating publicly the undying admiration which the story of the Alamo had awakened in a Japanese schoolby.

His scientific visit to America offers the desired opportunity. Dr. Shigo will take with him two blocks of stone from the battlefield of Narashino, during the Tokugawa Shogunate, the ambition grew that some day he might find a way of commemorating publicly the undying admiration which the story of the Alamo had awakened in a Japanese schoolby.

TRIP OF CROWN PRINCE MAY BE MADE IN 1915

Berlin, July 18.—Crown Prince William's trip through the German colonies, which he desired to make this year, but to which the Emperor refused to consent, may be made in 1915. According to a usually well-informed source, the consent of the Emperor has been gained, and all that now remains to be done is to induce the Reichstag to appropriate $46,000 for expenses. This, however, is likely to prove a serious obstacle. When the subject was mooted during the last session of the Parliament it encountered so much opposition that the Emperor's celsion to refuse to permit the crown prince to make the trip was in part ascribed to make the trip was in part ascribed to the attitude of the Reichstag. Other reasons for the Emperor's refusal are understood to have been his wish that the crown prince should first do some real work with the general staff, and his conviction that proper precautions to protect the personal welfare of the future ruler had not been taken. The latter objection, it is reported, has been removed and the other will have been removed by next spring.

Potate Ferty Years Old.

Paris, July 18.—A potato forty years old, in a perfect state of preservation, was discovered recently under the hearth stone of the former Mayor of Bazilles, the village celebrated for the battle which was fought there during the France-Prussian war. It was found by workinen carrying out repairs, embedded in a block of plaster. The house was rebuilt in 1873, after the village was burned by the Prussian troops, and it is supposed that the potato was then put into its strange hilling place.
